RETAIL THERAPY - "Shop till you drop"

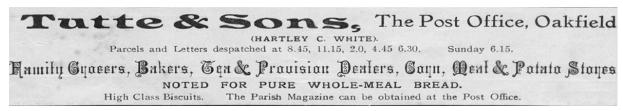

Frank Lyndon Tutte ran a grocery business and sub Post Office in Oakfield Hill for many years. His friendly, open demeanour led to him being well liked and respected in the area in which he had always lived.

When young, he was a keen member of various musical societies including the Ryde Philharmonic Society, and was also a member of the St John's choir for over sixty years, attending church twice a day on Sundays.

Mr Tutte had many other interests. He was involved in local affairs, serving as a member of St Helen's Council for many years until his business interests forced him to step down. He was also very interested in the work of the Hampshire Friendly Society and in younger days was an active member of many local building societies.

Frank Tutte died on 7 December 1931, aged 73, at his home Dumbarton, St John's, Ryde. He was survived by two sons and two daughters, his wife having died in April 1928. At his funeral service held at St John's, the Rev Gillson-Gill officiating said, he knew that he was expressing not only his own feelings but also those of many of the congregation, saying that they had lost a great friend. He added that there were many homes of the poor in Oakfield who could testify to Mr Tutte's many acts of kindness. After the service Mr Tutte was interred at Ryde Cemetery.

Memories of Elmfield Shops in the 1950s

In the early 1950s Elmfield had a number of shops in both Somerset Road and Marlborough Road. Most people in the village did their shopping locally, with a weekly or less frequent trip "up town" being regarded as a treat. The shopkeepers knew everybody by name and took time to chat.

Somerset Road

The chemist was run by Mr W Sutton, a stout man who always wore a white coat and later became Mayor of Ryde. He was assisted in his small, overcrowded shop by his wife. There was a wooden counter and numerous wooden drawers and jars for storage. (See the advert on page 2)

H G Jolliffe the grocer sold many products that were not prepacked. Biscuits came loose from large square tins with cheese and butter being cut from large slabs and bacon via the slicer. Sugar and dried fruit were weighed into blue paper bags. People shopped daily and stood in line waiting to be served by an assistant but often only paid at the end of the week when they received their wages. At Christmas the normal paper bags were replaced by bags printed with sprigs of holly.

Mr Peck ran the butchers shop that had sawdust on the floor and the meat was cut while you waited.

Wet fish was sold from Argyll Villa that had a smokehouse in the garden.

Marlborough Road

Mrs Rayner, always referred to as Lou, presided over the Post Office and hardware shop that was arranged internally in two parts with a door at each end. You could buy little flat tins of Gibbs Dentifrice, which claimed to "defend your ivory castles", shampoo powder in envelopes to dissolve in a jug of warm water, and household soap that was put in a small wire container and shaken about in the washing up water. Kitchen utensils and saucepans were hung around the walls.

Piggott the greengrocer had an open door and you could have your fruit and vegetables delivered.

Alexander the shoe repairer always had the smell of freshly cut leather as most shoes had leather soles and heels and were seldom thrown away. A good trade was to be had selling "Blakeys" and "Segs" and stick on rubber soles to the DIY repairer.

From the front room of her villa Mrs Pearse sold everything you required for sewing and mending.

Dallimores was a large grocers shop with its own bakery on the eastern side of the road that was later replaced by a laundrette.

S Fowler & Co. Drapers, Costumiers, 41 - 43 Union Street

stockman, especially successful with horses, but as his parents died young, Samuel was brought up by an uncle in West Cowes. He was apprenticed to a Newport draper and then worked for a time in London. Eventually he returned to open his own business in Union Street, Ryde. He had married Mary Brooke of St Helens in 1864 and they lived to celebrate their golden wedding in 1914 when their four bridesmaids also attended the party!

Samuel Fowler was the son of a well known

Mr Fowler was a Town Councillor for around 40 years, an Alderman, Deputy Mayor, Senior Justice of the Peace and Chairman of the Vectis Building Society.

1921 Receipt

Mr Fowler was very fond of country life; enjoyed the gun season, rode every morning before breakfast until he was nearly 80 years old and was regularly a horse judge at shows.

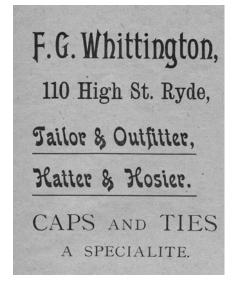

S Fowler & Co., circa 1950

He was a man of culture and great geniality and much respected. He was a consistent supporter of all local charities and good causes and survived to the grand old age of 90.

Fowlers Department Store traded successfully and maintained very high standards. It suffered extensive fire damage in January 1991 and became a Wetherspoons Free House in 1998. It has retained its impressive frontage and the name S. Fowler & Co.

The Isle of Wight Observer of January 1881 has an impressive advertisement:

SEED POTATOES, IN FINE CONDITION FOR PLANTING, AT C DIMMICK'S NURSERY AND SEED ESTABLISHMENT, 146 - 147, HIGH STREET, RYDE.

It goes on to list 18 varieties of potato under four main headings: NEW AMERICAN KINDS, EARLY KINDS, SECOND EARLY KINDS and LATE KINDS. Most are priced at 1/6 per pound but the SNOWFLAKE, "said to be the best of the recent American introductions," is rather expensive at 3/6 per pound.

Cheaper varieties priced at only a shilling per pound include: the DALMAHOY, "a very first-class second early, boils white and floury, and is an abundant cropper"; SCOTCH ROCKS, "a well-known hardy late kind, very productive, and a good keeper"; EXTRA EARLY VERMONT, listed under the New Americans and said to much resemble the Bresee's "King of the Earlies."

A firm favourite must have been the SUTTON'S HUNDREDFOLD FLUKE, "a very handsome potato, being encircled with a crimson band, very productive, large, and one of the best to resist the disease."

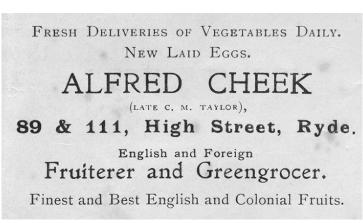

Charles Dimmick.
Thanks to Marc Wayne Dimmick for the photograph

Charles Dimmick was an entrepreneur in the world of gardening, with his shop in the High Street and green houses in the town. He developed his business from small beginnings, starting work at the age of 11 in a nursery and market garden. He worked his way up to become under and head gardener for various wealthy employers. Having first bought limited premises, his business thrived, expanded and he even provided plants to Osborne House for the Royal Household.

Charles was also an itinerant Methodist preacher for over 40 years and had connections with the Temperance Movement. He was a member of the Ryde Commissioners, Town Council and Cemetery Committee.

Charles had a particular interest in potatoes, having published a book in 1845, "Potato Disease and its Prevention," which received good reviews. He also published his autobiography in 1885 (you can read it on our website http://rshg.org.uk/Dimmick.asp)

Edmund Rickard was born in St Dominick, Cornwall in 1839 and came to Ryde with his wife Mary Maria Maccaffrey. He set up his watch, clock and jewellery business in 1857, trading at 139 High Street, later moving to 9 High Street. The photograph, with Edmund standing in his shop doorway, shows the wide range of goods for sale, many made by skilled craftsmen on the premises. His children Alfred, Minnie, Lottie and Ethel all helped their father in the business.

Edmund Rickard died on 7 November 1902 at 9 High Street and is buried in Ryde Cemetery. The business continued to trade under the Rickard name.

Other jewellers in Ryde included Morriss' Diamond Shop and Bernard Mitchell Ltd
